Changes I made, and why

Home

What was bad: No clear next step. Hours, food policy and vaccination rules were all packed into one paragraph, with the phone number buried inside the text instead of standing out.

What I changed: Added one clear button (Check availability) and split the facts into short, scannable rows instead of a wall of text.

Kennels

What was bad: Everything (bedding, exercise times, toy dog area, heating) ran together in one dense paragraph, so a quick fact was hard to find.

What I changed: Broke the facts into a one item per row layout, and gave every dog related page the same accent colour so it's obvious at a glance which section you're in.

Cattery

What was bad: Same problem as Kennels: a long paragraph mixing facility details, food and price all together.

What I changed: Same fix as Kennels, but with its own accent colour, so cat content and dog content look visually distinct from one another.

Grooming

What was bad: Sharron's personal introduction and the actual price list were mixed into one block of text, so you had to read through her whole message just to find the prices.

What I changed: Separated the personal intro from the service/price list, so pricing can be scanned on its own.

Rates

What was bad: Dog sizes were only described by breed examples (e.g. Lab, Staffie, Dalmatian). If your dog isn't one of those exact breeds, you have to guess which price applies.

What I changed: Added a simple size scale, Small through XX Large, so you match your dog by size instead of having to remember a breed to size mapping.

Our Terriers

What was bad: This page is really about the family's dog breeding history, but it used the exact same layout as the boarding pages, so it read as just another service rather than something different.

What I changed: Kept it as its own page, but gave it a distinct visual style so it's clear this is a different kind of content.

Contact

What was bad: There was no way to actually get in touch on the site itself, just an address and phone number, and no confirmation that a message had ever gone through.

What I changed: Added a form with a real confirmation message after submitting, so you know your enquiry has actually been received.

Basically, the same few problems kept showing up everywhere: no clear next step, everything buried in long paragraphs, and no feedback when you actually tried to do something. I kept all the same information and the same seven pages, just made it easier to actually use.
